THE PROSECUTION'S CASE: Under the old law, a prosecutor usually had to prove a defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. But under the new law, the prosecutor only has to prove the defendant's guilt by a preponderance of the evidence. That means the prosecutor only has to prove that it is more likely than not that the defendant is guilty. The new law also allows a prosecutor to charge a defendant with a crime if the defendant has been charged with the same crime in the past. This is called "habitual criminality."
